NOSTALGIA

"This is a day for nostalgia - not for sadness", said the Commanding Officer of BMH Iserlohn, Col M J Tinsley, yesterday afternoon in his speech to British and German guest of the Drawdown Ceremony at the BMH. With these words the Colonel marked something in advance, which will connect many British people and people from Iserlohn visibly and invisibly for the rest of their lives.

On the British side, many Doctors, Officers and Sisters will have fond memories of their time in Iserlohn, of their stay in a beautiful town amidst wonderful woods and with a friendly, open population, many of whom have a particular fondness for the 'British Way of Life'.

On the other side, the people of Iserlohn, of whom many had very good contacts to the British people, will miss their friends, who helped them to have a more worldly, open approach by showing them the 'British Way of Life'.

Memories remain, and they are the only paradise which cannot be taken away from us.
